The 1997 US Supreme Court ruling regarding physician-assisted suicide is often misrepresented or misunderstood. The question before the court was specific: Are state laws that criminalize physician-assisted suicide unconstitutional? The high court ruled that such laws were not unconstitutional. That ruling, however, did not make physician-assisted suicide a crime throughout the land.

10/9/2021 · Assisted dying goes by a variety of names from country to country.¹ These are often chosen to shape public discourse, and the weight of different factors varies by country. The practice is less likely in places and cultures that look more to family and society to make healthcare decisions, often to the point of shielding a patient from knowledge of a diagnosis and treatment options.

9/9/2021 · Engaged neutrality. Doctors' views on assisted dying are split, and most doctors' organisations take no position on the issue; a few—including the BMA—oppose legalisation.¹³ Their stance matters: lawmakers and judges regularly seek, and listen to, their views. The BMJ has called for the professions' representatives to take a position of neutrality—neither in support nor opposition ...
