Critical Care by Theresa Brown was a very well-written book about being a nurse in oncology units in Pittsburg. Yes there were many sad parts, but it was also uplifting in many ways. I've read a lot of books written by medical professionals, and too many of them were whiney sob stories about how hard it is to work in this field and how terrible and demanding some patients can be.

1/6/2010 · CRITICAL CARE: A NEW NURSE FACES DEATH, LIFE, AND EVERYTHING IN BETWEEN by Theresa Brown is a short book with a deceptive simplicity. First, two disclosures that color my perceptions: 1) I have been a RN since 1979; earned a master’s degree in nursing in 1996 and am in advanced nursing practice, as a nurse practitioner. 2) I love my profession.

Brown's experience on her first unit should be a caution for new nurses: the culture of a particular unit can easily make or break you -- when you are new, it is how you judge yourself. less Download links for: Critical Care: A New Nurse Faces Death, Life, and Everything in Between Advocacy is a common thread of quality end-of-life (EOL) nursing care, encompassing pain and symptom management, ethical decisionmaking, competent culturally sensitive care, and assistance through the death and dying process. The foundation of advocacy is the nurse-patient relationship. Advocacy has 2 parts: information and support.
