30/5/2005 · The objectives of the present work were to study the embryogenic competence of floral tissues of Feijoa sellowiana and to investigate the influence of plant growth regulators on somatic embryo induction and development in order to establish a somatic embryogenesis protocol starting from somatic tissues. Petals, stamens and ovaries of floral buds were cultivated onto LPM basal medium ...

A procedure for the regeneration of cacao (Theobroma cacao) plants from staminode explants via somatic embryogenesis was developed. Rapidly growing calli were induced by culturing staminode Somatic embryogenesis is a vegetative propagation method which permits the production of several embryos capable of generating plants similar to the initial one from non-sexual tissues. Somatic embryogenesis has been the most used method these last years for in vitro regeneration of elite genotypes of cocoa (Niemenak et the somatic embryogenesis process. We successfully collected flowers in St. Lucia, transported them to Penn State to use as tissue culture explants and regenerated plantlets via somatic embryogenesis. A large genotype effect on the primary somatic embryo regeneration was observed that was consistent with previous reports (Li et al. 1998;
