25/7/2018 · · Create a chapter-by-chapter outline. This is the method I use to outline all of my books because it's the way my brain thinks. I like to first organize all of the chapter headings, and then using a combination of research and the knowledge I already have on the topic, I create subtopics within each chapter.

Most outlines need not be so detailed. To present the basic structure of a term paper, article, or chapter (that is, anywhere from 4,000 to 12,000 words), two levels of headings should suffice, and that is what I've used for my Article Outline Example: Decimal format, which outlines Wells's article in only two pages.
