- The Introduction and Discussion are like bookends around your Methods and Results.
- They integrate your original findings with the literature and current knowledge.
- Context, Justification, and Focus addressed in the Introduction are echoed in the Discussion section: – Focus = Summary of findings – Context = How do findings fit in?

by a discussion of that evidence. And in that discussion, you need to make sure that you point to specific elements of the selection and explain clearly and explicitly why it is that they are important. Finally, note how the paragraph ends with a clear statement about what the audience should come away with. Think of it as a conclusion, if you like.

A well-written discussion should provide clear "statements of the main findings", "possible explanations and implications", "strengths and weaknesses of the study and other studies", "unanswered ...
