Imperial Leather-the title is suggestive not just of soap but the sado-masochistic rituals of colonial sexuality. In this large and often brilliant work Anne McClintock aspires to connect race to gender, and sexuality, class, and psychoanalysis to material history. It moves through three dis-

Imperial Leather: Race, Gender and Sexuality in the Colonial Contest defies summarization; not because Anne McClintock fails to present a sustained argument in this engaging and frequently brilliant text but because her argument grounds itself in a disavowal of ho- mogenizing gestures.
