learning theories have been applied to the management of instruction include the develop-ment of behavioral objectives, contingency contracts, and personalized systems of instruction (PSI).
Behaviorists, as well as others, argue that the only evidence of learning comes from the of development (Rummel, 2008). Details of both theories will be highlighted in connection to curriculum and instruction in traditional and an online learning environment. The two theories of learning discussed in this paper are behaviorism and constructivism. Behaviorists believed that “only learning process and a multilinear model of adult development, both of which are consistent with what we know about how people learn, grow, and develop. The theory is called "Experiential Learning" to emphasize the central role that experience plays in the learning process, an emphasis that distinguishes ELT from other learning theories.

Adult learning theory is founded on the principles that effective training is:

- Relevant – to the experience or intended experience of the adult learner. Whereas children and adolescents will attempt to learn content isolated from its application, adults learn best when they see the relevance of the Statistical Learning Theory: A Tutorial Sanjeev R. Kulkarni and Gilbert Harman February 20, 2011 Abstract In this article, we provide a tutorial overview of some aspects of statistical learning theory, which also goes by other names such as statistical pattern recognition, nonparametric classification and estimation, and supervised learning.

People have been trying to understand learning for over 2000 years. Learning theorists have carried out a debate on how people learn that began at least as far back as the Greek philosophers, Socrates (469 –399 B.C.), Plato (427 – 347 B.C.), and Aristotle (384 – 322 B.C). The debates that have occurred through the ages reoccur today in a
