legal translation. The aim of this paper is to demonstrate the potential of corpus-based studies as a methodology for researching legal translation and as a tool in translator training. 1. Corpus-based studies of language as a methodology The term corpus linguistics is relatively new as it dates back to the 1980s. Yet this methodology co-occur” (Biber & Conrad 1999, 183), i.e. lexical bundles, in different genres of legal texts. Most studies in the field of lexical bundles in legal texts have only been based on one language (e.g.

Jablonkai 2009; Go?d?-Roszkowski 2011; Breeze 2013), whereas translation-oriented contrastive studies on lexical bundles are lacking.

[6, 7]. Most approaches focus on developing rule-based systems based on parser structures and limited to certain simplification operations. Corpus-based systems, which can learn the simplification operations, have also been exploited through the use of parallel aligned corpora ...

the Corpus approach Is corpus linguistics a methodology? Is it theory? Most corpus linguists are not willing to answer that question in such terms, but when analyzing language using corpora, there is a “method” to employ. The Corpus Approach (Biber, Conrad, & Reppen, 1998, p. 4) is comprised of four major characteristics:

N2 - Corpus-based Translation Studies focuses on translation as a product by comparing comparable corpora of translated and non-translated texts. A number of distinctive features of translations have been posited including, for example, explicitation, simplification, normalisation, levelling out, source language interference, and under-representation of target language unique items.
