This essay examines Freud's construction of a mythical moment during early childhood, in which differences between male and female sexual identities are said to originate. It focuses on the way in which Freud divides fear and envy between the sexes, allocating the emotion of (castration) fear to men, and that of (penis) envy to women.

1/7/2018 · Abstract. In this chapter is a look at attachment theory and the social history of parenting and motherhood. I explore the role of parenting and attachment as important to unfolding this narrative. Attachment Theory is the study of relationship and developed as a research area in the 1940s. Developed by John Bowlby, a psychoanalyst, Attachment ...
