The way people describe their homes may reflect whether their time at home feels restorative or stressful. This article uses linguistic analysis software (Linguistic Inquiry and Word Count) to analyze 60 dual-income spouses' self-guided home tours by calculating the frequency of words describing clutter, a sense of the home as unfinished, restful words, and nature words.

Yet how these deployments affect soldiers and their reintegration back into the home unit and family has received scant attention. The few studies that exist focus mainly on military family resilience, family support, and relational stability (Kgosana, 2010; Ntshota, 2002; Pitse, 2009, Van Breda, 1999, 2001), but beyond this, it remains a relatively unexplored subject.

OBJECTIVES The home is both older Americans' largest asset and their largest consumption good. This article employs new data on the consumption and assets of older Americans to investigate what role the home plays in the economic lives of older adults. METHODS We used 20 years of data from the Consumer Expenditure Survey to examine the asset and consumption trends of four cohorts of older ...

The European Union (EU) has undergone significant economic crises in recent years. Therein, young people were amongst the hardest hit groups, with youth unemployment rising as high as 50% in some member states. Particularly high rates of youth unemployment were often observed in rural areas, where labour market supply in relation to demand were notably divergent.
