Pharmacotherapy in Primary Care will help frontline clinicians identify the array of potential decisions and provide them with the evidence that, when used in conjunction with the clinicians' individual clinical judgment and their patients' values and expectations, will assist greatly in the millions of patient-care decisions that must be made daily in primary care settings.

Pharmacotherapy in Primary Care fulfills the four attributes to make it useful in daily clinical practice: it is relevant to everyday practice, evidence-based, concise, and reader friendly. Parents usually notice signs in the first two years of their child's life.[1] These signs often develop gradually, though some children with autism reach their developmental milestones at a normal pace and then regress.[2]
