Furniture refinishing is an easy and very satisfying DIY project. It's also a great way to furnish your house on the cheap. With just a little elbow grease and not too much money—$50 to $75 in supplies—you can easily remove old paint or other finish and give an old piece of furniture a new lease on life.

As the final step in furniture making, finishing has a long tradition, and the more that is known of its history, the better finish problems can be dealt with. All of this contributes to determining whether a finish is potentially original and should be retained or whether the existing finish is incorrect and of little historic significance (such as polyurethane on a Philadelphia Rococo piece).
