From Diocletian's coup in 284 to Constantine's emergence as sole Augustus after his defeat of Licinius in 325, the Roman Empire was governed by a series of 'colleges' of emperors, who, in theory, cooperated together.<sup>1</sup> In fact, the extent of trust and co-operation between ambitious and assertive colleagues varied.

2/9/2014 · The Anarchy of AD 235 to 284 had destroyed much of the old structure, and emergency improvisation had created a new one. The ramshackle organisation that emerged was then consolidated into new type of army by Diocletian (AD 284-305) and Constantine the Great (AD 306-337).
