8/10/2013 · The famous twentieth-century food writer Mary Frances Kennedy Fisher, or M.F.K. Fisher as she signed her writings, really wrote about love and the hunger for it. In fact, she wrote about love and the hunger for it with such directness that it seems unnecessary for her to have had to explain as much to readers in the introduction to The Gastronomical Me (1943).

24/3/2016 · I love MFK Fisher's elegant essays on food and travel, collected in books with unforgettable titles like How to Cook a Wolf and The Gastronomical Me. But it is her posthumous novel, The Theoretical Foot, just published by Counterpoint, that has taken my breath away. Written in 1939, this gracefully-written autobiographical novel was not published in her lifetime due to family objections.
