In her book, Strangers to Ourselves (1991), Kristeva explores the notion of the stranger in a foreign country. Through this, she provides both a historical and theoretical framework for understanding the notion of the foreigner in all its intricacy, especially with regards to the idea of strangeness within the self.

Kristeva, Julia Kristeva, Julia Born in Bulgaria in 1941, Julia Kristeva went to Paris in 1966 to finish her dissertation on French literature; there she worked with Roland Barthes and Lucien Goldmann. By 1979 she had also completed her training in psychoanalysis. Her analytic practice has a significant influence on her writing of the 1980s.
